They married, had a beautiful daughter and moved to an idyllic small college town in the hills of central West Virginia. David was a state trooper and loved his job. As a family, they were happily involved in peewee football, cheerleading, church youth groups, and school activities. Life was good! That all changed one fateful day. Trooper Dave Harris didn't come home for dinner that evening. The officer at their door said he wouldn't be coming home ever again. He had been killed in a car crash while responding to a robbery-in-progress alarm (ironically, a false alarm). This collection of poems chronicles the lives of this young daughter and mother, how they survived their grief and opened doors to once again celebrate life.
