Not illustrated. 1913 Excerpt: . . . the same clean personal character through his whole life. As a lad he was bold, active, athletic and a leader among his fellows. He excelled among his playmates both on the playgrounds and in the school room. His reputation as a daring and skillful horseback rider still survives, and he was, perhaps, the best baseball player of the village and has all his life been a keen lover of this sport. He finished the Lamar public schools and later attended the Indiana State University one year. He was chosen principal of the Lamar public schools when he was only twenty years of age--being the youngest of the corps of teachers--in which capacity he was remarkably successful. On March 27, 1873, he was married to Miss Kate Fast and three children of this union survive him, namely, Harry W. Timmonds, a law yer in the active practice...
