The vital importance of the topic-sentence to unity and coherence in the paragraph was made clear in Sections 170 and 173. 179. Position of the topic-sentence. The topic-sentence is often placed first in the paragraph, especially when a principle is illustrated, a general idea made clear by argument, or a formal proposition defended. It is placed first in the following examples. Ex. 1. Topic-sentence. What a peculiar power of fascination there was in him (Charles Sumner) as a public man! It acted much through his eloquence, but not through his eloquence alone. There was still another source from which that fascination sprung. Behind all he said and did there stood a grand manhood, which never failed to make itself felt. What a figure he was, with his tall and stalwart frame, his manly face, topped with his shaggy locks, his noble bearing, --the finest type of an American senatorship, the tallest oak of the forest! Carl Schurz. Ex. 2. Topic-sentence. As a forensic orator, I know of no age, past or present, which can boast his (Webster's) superior. He united the boldness and energy of the Grecian, and the grandeur and strength of the Roman, to an original, sublime simplicity, which neither Grecian nor Roman possessed. He did not deal in idle declamation and lofty expression; his ideas were not embalmed in rhetorical embellishments, nor buried in the superfluous tinsel of metaphor and trope. He...
