Slee published nothing in his life-time but his farewell sermon, on resigning his office and membership in the established church of England. By a peculiar misfortune, not necessary to be detailed, most of the authors letters from his friends, between 1774, and 1784, were lost. The following of Mr. Slees having been preserved, and having fallen into his hands, are given to the world as specimens of his piety. They were never intended for publication, but they will, not be the less valuable on this account. No. I. To the Rev. W. C. then in London. Hamllerly, Oct. 19, 1779. Rev. and dear Sir, I HAVE seen your letter to Mr. W. expressive of your earnest desire, along with that of Mr. Hartley, that I should visit you. Would my present circumstances have admitted this kind and friendly invitation, it would have been chearfully accepted. But the contrary is now the case. Hear Hear my apology: I have many invitations from different quarters, --and with them all I cannot at present conveniently comply; and to prefer one before another, might seem to carry in it an unbecoming partiality: the publication of my sermon, after I came here, took up a considerable time: and I am now engaged in some desirable studies, in which I would not choose to be much interrupted, and which, through the divine blessing, may. be of future advantage, and yield...
