Pursuant to a congressional request, GAO reviewed the Department of Defense's (DOD) training of linguists engaged in intelligence-related activities, focusing on: (1) the language and technical training provided to DOD linguists; and (2) military service policies and procedures governing the management, training, and compensation of the linguist workforce. GAO found that: (1) a significant number of linguists graduate from the DOD Defense Language Institute (DLI) without having met its established language proficiency standards; (2) although the number of DLI graduates has increased, a third of its students graduate below the required level-2 proficiency; (3) the military services often allow students who do not meet the proficiency standard at graduation to proceed to technical school; (4) many linguists' language proficiency declines up to 25 percent while attending technical school because their technical training focuses on developing non-language skills; (5) although many students regain their language proficiency, some do not regain the same level of proficiency they had at graduation from DLI; (6) the Army is the only military service that requires operating unit commanders to establish unit-level language maintenance programs; (7) the...
